

Redfield's "investigation" will whitewash his department.

Despite charges made against the steamship inspection service by the Seamen's union, whose secretary, Victor Olander, has tried time after time to get satisfaction from Redfield, the federal inquiry will be confined to the Eastland.

Even should the hearing get beyond the secretary, and show faults in the service, the condition of other steamers will not be inquired into.

Captain Nils B. Nelson, supervising inspector of Cleveland, gave the secretary one jolt during the hearing. Nelson was being questioned about keels of lake steamers. He said all the boats were keelless.

Then the secretary, who believes the present method of establishing the stability of steam vessels—all done by insurance companies, without federal supervision—is the correct idea, made a mis-step.

"Has it ever been suggested to you that this should be a part of the government inspection functions?" he asked.

"Yes, and I think it should be," was the answer.

The secretary's face fell. That wasn't any way to worry a man on his vacation.

More funerals of Eastland victims are being held today.

BOAT PASSENGERS CROWD RAIL —STEAMER LISTS

Yonkers, N. Y., July 30.—Passengers on Iron Steamboat Co.'s excursion steamer Irtus, bound for outing of Yonkers Democratic club at College Point, L. I., yesterday, received sudden scare immediately after the boat started.

Some one spied passing gunboat and crowd of passengers surged over to the starboard side causing steamer to list. There was 1,375 persons on board at the time. With the Eastland disaster in mind, members of the crew ordered the passengers who had gathered against the rail to disperse.

MAN WHO MADE GIRL WORK ON STREETS FINED $200

The other salesgirls in the aisle at the Boston Store noticed she was weary. Her name will not be told in this story, for her secret is still her own and her job is safe until her secret is out.

Her former sweetheart, Moe Goldberg, was fined $200 by Judge Heap in morals court yesterday after she had told the story of how he treated her.

This girl who works in the Boston Store is young. It is hard to realize that she is a mother and that she has suffered.

Some years ago when she was very young she boarded with her sister. She had a baby. She blamed her sister's husband. The sister took the baby to raise.

After her sister's family had moved to New York she met Goldberg. He was a cutter at Hart, Schaffner & Marx's. She told him the story of her baby. She thought he loved her. She loved him.

After she had lived with him a while she said in court that he went on the streets to earn money for him and gave him $300.

When he wanted to open a saloon at 501 Dearborn st. she swore out a bastardy charge against her brother-in-law and was awarded $300.

After a hospital operation for a disease she returned to the Boston Store. Her salary was not sufficient to live on, so she repeatedly asked Goldberg for money. When he refused and she was told he was living with another woman she had him arrested. In court Goldberg admitted taking money from the girl to open the saloon.

The Boston Store girl has no more money than she had before Goldberg was found guilty. With her wages so scant will she heed the call of the street with its lure of good clothes and a full stomach?
